

Your Quick Guide to
Enterprise Resource Planning (ERP)

Why your business needs a new ERP system?

There are many reasons why businesses are choosing to migrate to a new ERP solution and each business faces unique challenges, but there are a few common motivators behind changing:

- Major changes to your business and its processes which make your existing ERP system unsuitable or unsustainable.
- Accessing and collating information about your business is slow and limited due to it being stored on many different systems.
- Accounting and other processes take longer than necessary, affecting the productivity of your workforce.
- Customer satisfaction and sales are suffering due your team lacking the knowledge and information they need to make decisions quickly.
- Information is shared across the business by word of mouth.
- The cost of maintenance is spiralling and your existing system is outdated.
- You are using a bespoke system and the supplier is no longer available.
- Your aging system is no longer supported by the vendor/author or by new operating systems.
- Your existing system isn't flexible enough to support growth.
- You want to trade abroad, but your ERP system lacks multi-lingual or multi-currency capabilities.

When do you need to invest in ERP?

There is no one-size-fits-all answer to this question. That being said, if you are experiencing any of the challenges we outlined above and you're feeling constrained by the functionality of your existing software, it may be time for you to look into upgrading to a new ERP system.
